What can schools do to help all learners succeed?

How can a school identify and address language needs?

What is the benefit of a whole-school approach that facilitates access to the language(s) of schooling?

“A roadmap for schools to support the language(s) of schooling” enables your school to setup a tailor-made whole-school strategy to advance learners’ competences in the language(s) of schooling. The web-based tools support the schools to develop the linguistic and critical thinking skills ALL learners need in ALL subjects to ensure learning and school success.

The self-assessment tool

It provides an online survey with adapted statements for five stakeholders in schooling: headteachers, teachers, non-teaching staff, students and parents.

Based on the survey results, the school receives a customised report highlighting its strengths and areas for development, both as an overview and with respect to specific language-related areas.

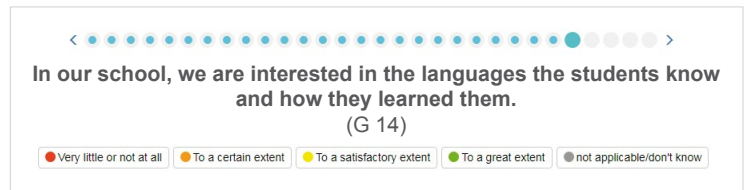

This process helps initiate reflection upon the language situation within the school.

Promising practices database

In response to the individual results of the school, the ROADMAP offers examples of promising practices from all over Europe and beyond. These can be adapted to specific contexts and help plan a whole-school strategy, in direct response to the needs identified in the context of the self-assessment process.

Coordinator's package

The Coordinator's package contains a wide range of documents in order to support the implementation of the ROADMAP.

Example of a result from the self-assessment tool. It shows which areas in the school have achieved a high level of implementation (green and yellow) and which ones need further improvement (red and orange):

Example of a promising practice:

Identifying keywords in every lesson to support literacy
Keywords in every subject to access the curriculum

Primary stakeholder(s) targeted: teacher
Dimension(s): Promoting language development
